Having the skills of navigation at your disposal is a liberating experience. Getting away from the crowds, inventing your own routes, discovering new areas, and, perhaps most importantly, giving yourself the confidence to do all this, is all part of making your outdoor experiences that much more enjoyable.

This comprehensive guide to navigation is aimed at giving you the incentive to do so. With the author's own anecdotes and handy hints, those new to using the map and compass, and those who have already mastered navigational skills, will find this guide inspiration enough to get out there, experience the outdoors safely and have fun.

About the author

Pete Hawkins trained as a geography teacher and taught in schools for a year before escaping to the Peak National Park's Environmental Centre for an outdoor job. He took over map and compass training and has since written for a variety of outdoor magazines. He now runs a navigation school and leads walking holidays around the world from his base in the Peak District.
