The Cumbria Coastal Way is a walking route from north Lancashire towards the Scottish border.

The route follows the Cumbria coast from the boundary with Lancashire, around the southern Cumbrian peninsulas with their vast stretches of estuarine sands, through the Lake District National Park and the industrial heritage of the west coast, along the Solway Firth and through border country to the historic city of Carlisle with glimpses of Hadrian's Wall, then into Scotland to end at the famous border town of Gretna.

The route was established by Cumbria Council in the late 1980s and can be walked in its entirety, or walked in sections, by people of all ages and abilities. It is well supported by public transport.

Key marketing points

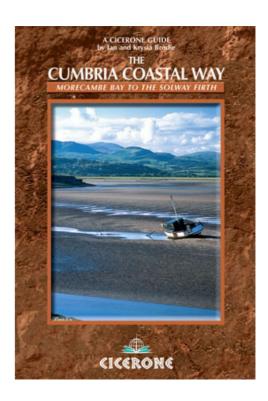

- Established waymarked coastal route in an outstandingly beautiful county
- Can be walked in sections, or in a two-week trek. The whole route is suitable for most grades of walker.

About the author

The authors, Ian and Krysia Brodie, have worked together on several walking books including 'Walking from Garstang', now in its fourth edition. They frequently walk along the coast as well as amongst the fells and wider landscapes of northern England.
